

JUST PLANE SPOOKY!

- Strange site strikes again
- Security men walk off airport development

by Joan Watson

It started with strange noises, worsened with some falling walls and has now led to a walkout.

Since work began in 2004 there have been reports of strange events during the redevelopment of Glasgow International Airport. Equipment disappearing, new buildings damaged, strange tentacled shapes seen moving in the dusk, unearthly buzzing voices heard deep in the marshes of Paisley Moss.

SCREAMING

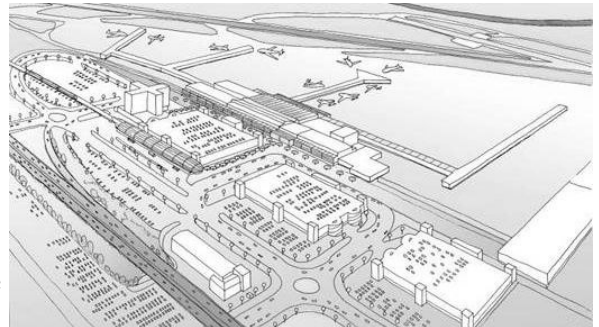

Bob McLennan, a guard at the site, spoke to the Record after walking off the site on Thursday. "Tuesday night was hell, worse than anything I've ever seen. The local lads were all over the site, nicking whatever they could. Come two in the morning, there's a hell of a buzzing, everyone legs it. And then there was the screaming over by the fuel farm."

"All the trouble is put down to the local neds. I admit I've cracked a few heads in my time here. But there's something else out there. And I tell you, after Tuesday, even if it is neds, I'm not facing it."

FOLK TALES

Jane Morris, a Ranger for Scottish Natural Heritage, said "There have always been stories about strange sounds and lights above the Moss. Nothing ever came from a witness who hadn't had a few. At SNH we hear these things on most of our sites. You've got to remember, Scotland has a rich history of folk tales – kelpies, witches, Tam O'Shanter – that sort of thing."

None of the local kids were willing to talk, and the police made no comment except laughter. Which leaves the question everyone's asking – has the continuing redevelopment of Abbotsinch disturbed something best left alone?
